The Daily Press.

HONGKONG JUNE 22, 1866.

THE alarming commercial intelligence brought by the present mail overshadows its political news. In one sense indeed the financial panic is simply the result of the political convulsions which were anticipated, but inasmuch as those convulsions were still, when the last telegrams left, matters of anticipation, it is not possible to say that the crash has altogether been caused by a disturbance of European peace, that commerce is suffering from the undeserved misfortunes brought on by war. Houses which were looked upon as types of mercantile solidity, banks about which no whisper had previously been circulated are represented as falling on every side. Confidence was undermined and companies which can have been in no way to blame for the disorganisation which has brought about these calamities, suffer with the authors of all the mischief by the depreciation of their shares, if not of their credit. When the first mutterings of the storm were heard here, the general impression was that we heard the effect without being told of the cause, that war must already have broken out when the Bank act was suspended, houses like Overend and Gurney's suspending payment, and the commencement of a commercial panic of imparalleled intensity announced in a few startling words. But now it seems that although the panic came on in the beginning of May, no war had actually broken out up to the 30th of that month. Fear of what might happen has produced this extraordinary and bewildering crisis of which we read. That under such circumstances business must have been carried on for a considerable time on the most reckless and immoral principles is no matter of opinion, it is a matter of palpable certainty. The possibility of a war between Austria and Prussia does not bring down great firms which have been conducting their affairs in a sound and healthy manner. Small firms may sometimes be driven to lean on others and in a crisis may find themselves wrecked through no fault of their own, but this does not apply to great companies and important houses of business. A crisis, for such establishments is simply a test; if they are true gold it does no harm and only if they are spurious does it injure them. It may inconvenience them for a time, it may occasion them heavy losses and cripple the operations of the future but, it is not easy to imagine that it can bring them utterly to grief without previous fault of their own. With the Bombay houses falling like packs of cards very little sympathy will be felt. The reckless speculation, the unprincipled commercial gambling which has been going on at that place for so long a time prepared the way for the events which are now announced, rendered it inevitable indeed, that such events should take place sooner or later. Men cannot play a game for high stakes without running the chance of losing, and when they play a game in which, while their winning does good to no one but themselves, their losses may create wide spread evil, they must not expect much commiseration on their own account when the unlucky numbers come up on the dice.

The actual losses of the men who have been partners in the firms whose commercial death is announced, or shareholders in the banks and companies which are winding up or going through the Bankruptcy Court, is, one might almost say, a small part of the evil which ensues from such occurrences. Thousands of nameless victims who had no more hand in the misdeeds, imprudence, recklessness, whatever may have been the really efficient cause of any given failure than the man in the Moon, suffer untold misery through the commercial crimes of those in whom they trusted. We read for instance in a telegram, "the failure of the English Joint Stock Bank is a small affair. No connexion with the great London Bank of that name." In that "small affair" however, how many are the sufferers? How many have lodged their little accumulations of hard won coin in that small vessel doomed to shipwreck, how many reduced widows and orphans have trusted their remnants of property to "the bank" congratulating themselves on their forethought and care in so doing? When a great firm loses money in a bank failure it is hard that the money should be lost, hard that the partners should make a bad year when they have looked forward to the natural rewards of industry, patience and sagacity; it is hard upon those who are working on in the hope of sharing as speedily as may be in the annual harvests, and thus find the period of their improfitable labour prolonged, but these are not the victims who suffer most cruelty. So much more work, so much less wealth, is the end of the matter so far as they are concerned, and in contemplating their prospects with no contented mind it may perhaps be well for them to think how very much more terrible are the effects of a crisis like this, on the middle class at home than, to mercantile communities abroad.

ALMOST lost amongst the startling items of commercial news with which the telegrams are full, is a political announcement of the very first importance. A telegram dated 21st of May says "all powers agreed to congress, first meeting twenty-fifth." Although we have no destinct account of its meeting it is evident that the congress took place in due course for though on the 28th of May, it is stated that, England, France and Russia have dispatched identic notes to Austria and Prussia, a line of diplomatic action which seems rather inconsistent with the plan that the representatives of all these powers were sitting at a green table in Paris, still on the 30th, the date of the latest published telegram it is stated that the Federal Diet had been invited to send a representative to Congress. Clearly therefore congress was sitting, the great dream of Napoleon III. has being brought to pass. Before the outbreak of the Schleswig-Holstein war, the French Emperor propounded his remedy for the embarrassments with which Europe was occupied at the time. By the opposition of Earl RUSSELL the congress project was defeated, and the war, which if the congress had met would have been assuredly averted, swept over the north of Europe. The Emperor, whatever, may be his claim to that preternatural foresight with he is sometimes credited has at least this power of making his ideas come true, that he is very persevering, and gifted with an temper above disturbance. If he cannot for the moment carry out his views, he neither gives them up in a rage, nor hates the people who obstruct him. He is not in the least annoyed, so far as outward signs go, but the project, whatever, it may be which is temporarily defeated, is simply postponed, and if by bringing it forward again at a better opportunity, or again after that, it can eventually be brought to bear, that will certainly be done. The Emperor of the French announces at Auxerre his detestation of the treaties of 1815. The desire for a congress naturally grows out of this detestation, is fully explained by it, and the two things taken together foreshadow to some extent, the possible course which the congress may take. It is not to patch up the treaties, to smooth over local difficulties, to arrange this or that question by the help of the most ingenious compromise which can be invented, that the congress has been called together. It is evidently the intention of the Emperor to procure the reconstruction of the map of Europe, and enormous events may take their origin in the step meagrely reported by a few obscure words. That the war between Austria and Prussia, may even be averted in spite of its apparent imminence is one of the first reflections suggested by the news.

THE orderly course of business in Hongkong was interrupted yesterday afternoon in a rather extraordinary manner. We are all so accustomed to dissociate the idea of a financial operation amongst commercial men, from that of physical violence, that it is at first difficult to believe that anything like a personal struggle for the possession of dollars can take place in an organised community, and the first impression which people in Hongkong must have felt yesterday on hearing that there had been what is generally called a "row" at the Commercial Bank, must have been one of incredulity. Nevertheless an incident took place on the steps of that establishment which it would be difficult to describe in one word, without using that expressive combination of of letters. The facts of the matter appear to be these. A bill on the Commercial Bank for $100,000 which had been discounted some time previously by Agra and Masterman's, fell due yesterday. In the course of the morning Mr. ANDERSON sent it for payment, and the money was being counted out when the mail came in bringing intelligence that the Commercial Bank had stopped. Mr. ANDERSON went down to the Bank immediately to look after his interests, and received the assurance that the money would be paid. In fact the payment was then going on and notes to the value of about $40 000 had already been handed over the counter to the Compradore of Agra and Masterman's. The Compradore of the Commercial, however, seems to have interrupted the proceedings to ask for a portion of the notes back, promising, to give dollars instead, and Mr. ANDERSON on going into the office found that all but $20,000 of the notes had been returned on this understanding. These remaining notes he told the compradore to put in the bag intending to take them away himself, and make sure of so much of the payment at any rate. As he was leaving the Bank, however, he was surrounded by several of the employes and an effort was actually made to wrest the bag from him by force. It must have been so manifest to anyone of common sense that the notes already paid to his agent were his property, that it is difficult to understand the state of mind which could have induced any sane man to attempt such an extraordinary mode of withdrawing the paper from circulation. That it was attempted, however, seems beyond question. Mr. ANDERSON struggled manfully for his property, but whether he would have prevailed against odds may be doubted, if had not been that a policeman happened to be within hail at the time, and was called by him to the rescue. As a compromise, the notes were handed over to his custody and no further violence was attempted.

On these facts, and we believe the occurrence to have taken place as we have described, it is only possible to take one view of the transaction which seems eminently discreditable to those who converted an exchange transaction into a wrestling match. Before many days no doubt the legal proceedings which must of necessity be taken, will bring all details before the public and enable us to give a more emphatic opinion on the merits of the case than can be formed while it is only a few hours old

The Chartered Mercantile Bank.

The Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London and China has issued its eighth annual report, to be presented at the meeting appointed for the 15th inst. Considering the adverse circumstances against which all Eastern banks had to contend last year, the result must be highly satisfactory to the shareholders. After providing for all bad and doubtful debts, and defraying cost of management at all points, the net profit amounts to £38,203 6s. 11d., to which has to be added a sum of £65,760 7s. 3d., undivided profit brought forward from the preceding year, making a total £103,963 14s. 2d. Out of this sum £101,250 has been paid in two half-yearly dividends, namely, £63,750, or 8½ per cent. on the first July, and £37,500, or 5 per cent. on the 1st January last, making together 12½ per cent. for the year. The unappropriated balance of £2,713 14s. 2d. is carried forward to the profit and loss account of the current year. The Mauritius agency has closed on the 31st December last.—China Express.

The Mail Intelligence.

From the London & China Express we make the following extracts relating to the principle political events of the fortnight.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

The intelligence from Germany during the fortnight has all pointed to but one result—a war between the two great German Powers, into which the minor States would at once be inevitably drawn on one side or the other. The interchange of diplomatic notes has continued. First, Count Karolyi delivered to Count Von Bismarck two despatches from Count Mensdorff under the date of the 26th April. The first dispatch arranged for the gradual disarmament in connection with the military measures taken in Venetia. The second, a memorandum of 20 pages, treated of the question of the settlement of the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein, and stated that the moment had arrived for its solution. The Duchies did not belong either to Austria or Prussia, and the question must be submitted to the Diet. If Prussia refused, Austria would act alone at Frankfort.

The Prussian Government's answer to the above was forwarded to Vienna on the evening of the 1st inst. The substance of it is, that Prussia will not disarm so long as Austria shall maintain her armaments in Venetia. Prussia will probably increase her armaments in a given time. Prussia provisionally declines the proposal of Austria to refer the Schleswig-Holstein question to the Diet of Frankfort and threatens to bring it alone before the Diet in case of need. Another version is that Prussia declared that the Austrian armaments in Italy could not be indifferent to her, because in case of war Italy would be called to play a great part. The measures of Austria had upset the military equilibrium. The revocation of these measures is insisted on, and Prussia would disarm in equal proportion with Austria.

On the 27th April, Prussia summoned the Government of Saxony to disarm. The reply was that, in view of the notorious probability of war, it was not safe for Saxony to allow herself to be surprised by events. Should guarantees for the preservation of peace be given Saxony would discontinue her military preparations. It further explained that the armaments in question were made in preparation for the event of Saxony being called upon by the Federal Diet to furnish her contingent. The dispatch also stated that the Saxon Minister of the Interior is preparing the division of the electoral districts for the return of deputies to the German Parliament. A Berlin telegram asserts that Count von Bismarck has declared this explanation to be insufficient.

It is not doubted, in another statement, that the vote of the German Diet will be against Prussia. Should such be the case it is probable that Prussia will retire from the Germanic Confederation, and that hostilities will then commence. All the petty German States are in favour of Austria Saxony, it is said, demands the protection of the Germanic Diet against Prussia, and it is believed that 200,000 Federal troops will be sent to her assistance. Saxony, Wirtemberg, Hanover, and Electoral Hesse are reported to have given assurances that they will lend their support to Austria in the event of a conflict with Prussia. Bavaria has addressed communications of a friendly nature to the Austrian Government, without, however, taking up any decided position. The middle States advise Austria to lean entirely on the Federal Diet in the question of the Duchies.

Austria has been continuing her military preparations. The Government has ordered the purchase of 60,000 horses. Horse dealers in Vienna, Pesth, Brunn, and this town have undertaken the commission, and 15,000 horses are to be delivered in each place. The whole of the artillery has been placed on a war footing. Notice has been given that army surgeons are wanted. A camp of 15,000 men will be established at Pola. The coast of Dalmatia is being fortified, and the garrison of Trieste has been increased to 14,000 men, consisting principally of Croatian regiments. Great concentrations of troops and preparations for campaign are going on amongst the forces on the Servian frontier. Works are being actively carried on for the formation of an entrenched camp in Lido, one of the islands of Venice. 30,000 troops are being concentrated in the Italian districts of the Tyrol. The inhabitants of the fortified towns in Bohemia received notice some time back to lay in provisions for a considerable period, in consequence of the imminence of war. The goods traffic on the railway between Vienna and Trieste has been stopped by order of the Government. The railway bridge between Peschiera and Desenzano was destroyed on the 3rd by the military authorities, and the trains now only go as far as Peschiera. No railway tickets are issued at Vienna for Italy. Great excitement has been caused in Venice in consequence of the arrival of an order calling out the military and naval recruits for active service. Young men suspected of an intention to desert were to be sent to stations near the German frontier. Various changes of troops were being made, and the Italian regiments would be replaced by Croats. All the points on the coasts were to be fortified, and their garrisons reinforced.

Still, though all the Vienna papers consider it certain that war will break out in a few days rumour of mediation continue to circulate, and the idea of an European Congress was received with great favour. Lord Bloomfield, the English Ambassador, is said to have declared to Count Mensdorff, that should Austria renew any peaceful offer to Prussia it would be energetically supported by England at the Prussia Court. A proposal is stated to have been made at Paris by Prince Metternich, the Austrian Ambassador, that Austria and Italy should simultaneously disarm.

Vienna news of the 7th is as follows:—The reply of the Government to the last Prussian dispatch has been forwarded. Austria declares that she cannot disarm in Venetia, and that is the sole judge of the defensive measures to protect her frontiers, menaced by a Power which has long coveted Austrian territory. Besides, the said measures are necessary for the defence of the Federal territory. Austria justifies the defensive measures of Saxony. Orders have been issued for placing the whole Austrian army on a war footing, and for concentrating the army of the north on the Bohemian and Silesian frontiers. In view of the danger of war, the Government intends to convoke all the provincial diets throughout the empire. It is stated to have been resolved to utilise the ecclesiastical property in providing for the express of war, and the Government is reported to be now negotiating in order to obtain advance on the security of this property. As soon as the whole Austrian army has been placed on a war footing, the forces of Bavaria and Wurtemberg will be mobilised. The country surrounding Mantua has been innundated by the Austrian engineers, and the fortifications of Pesceira and Legnano have been strengthened.

In the course of a provincial speech of no intrinsic interest made by the Emperor of the French at Auxerre on the 6th of May, he said, he "detested the treaties of 1815," words which naturally at the present moment have been eagerly caught up.

A royal degree was issued on the 8th of May, ordering the formation of a corps of Italian volunteers, to be provisionally composed of twenty battalions, under the command of General Garibaldi. At a sitting of the Chamber of Deputies the bill granting the Government extraordinary powers to provide by Royal decrees for the maintenance of public safety was passed by 203 against 44 votes. The King was to leave on the 15th for the frontier. All classes of the army are called under arms and 100,000 men are fully equipped. The Senate and Chamber of Deputies pass the most warlike resolutions, and vote large sums of money to carry them into effect. A loan of £10,000,000 sterling has been contracted with the National Bank. The people are everywhere volunteering, and the National Guard offer to do the garrison duty. The fleet has left the Gulf of Genoa for a destination unknown.

THE REFORM BILL.

The division on the second reading of the Franchise Bill resulted nominally in a victory for Government, but virtually in a defeat. According to an old-established rule, a Ministry is bound to resign if the majority in its favour, on such an issue as this, be less in number than those members of the Cabinet who sit in the House. In the present case, the majority for the second reading was five; deduct the Ministers who voted confidence in themselves, and the division was evidently against them. It was taken in a very full House, 641 members having voted out of about 615 (ten seats being vacant). When the present House was elected it was calculated that the working Liberal majority was between sixty and seventy, and it is a remarkable evidence of the unpopularity of the Government policy that it should have dwindled down to five. Mr. Gladstone, however, decided to take the result of the division in its literal sense, and retain office; yielding, however, to the feeling of the House by at once bringing forward his Redistribution Bill, that it might be proceeded with contemporaneously with the Franchise Bill.

THE REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS.—No boroughs are entirely disfranchised; but forty-one small boroughs which now return two members each are combined into groups, each group returning one or two members, according to its aggregate population. By this means, and by taking one member from eight small boroughs, which now returns two each, forty-nine seats are gained. Twenty-six of these will go to the counties; South Lancashire being divided into two parts, each division with three members, and a third member being given to each division of any county which, not already having three members, possesses a population of 150 000. Of the remaining twenty-three seats, fifteen are given to English boroughs and one to the London University. Five members are added to existing borough constituencies; a second division is established in one metropolitan borough (Tower Hamlet), with two members; a new metropolitan borough (Chelsea and Kensington) is created, with two members; and six unrepresented municipal boroughs receive a member each. The remaining seven seats are presented to Scotland. The Scotch Bill reduces the occupation franchise to £7 and the county franchise to £10. The Irish Bill does not interfere with county representation, but reduces the borough franchise from £8 to £6. The second reading of the Redistribution Bill is fixed for the 14th instant, and the Committee on the Franchise Bill is postponed to the same date, so as to admit of their being proceeded with pari passu. And Mr. Gladstone has distinctly announced that Government will advise no prorogation of Parliament until the entire measure is either passed or finally rejected.

THE BUDGET.

After the long sustained excitement attending the Reform contest, the Budget, usually one of the most interesting features of the session, fell rather flat. It was known beforehand that in consequence of the large reductions in taxation last year, there would be but a small surplus to deal with, and a portion of this was already pledged by the Commercial Treaty with Austria, to a repeal of the timber duty and a reduction of the duty on wine in bottles. Of a surplus of one million and a quarter, about three quarters of a million are to be remitted on the articles of wine, wood, pepper, and public conveyances,—leaving about half a million free for another purpose. This, and a portion of the revenue of each succeeding year, Mr. Gladstone proposes to apply to the reduction of the National Debt. His scheme is a somewhat complicated one, but resolves itself into this; Government hold on deposit for savings banks a sum of nearly £25,000,000, which they can deal with as they like, so long as the principal is safe. These Mr. Gladstone proposes to convert into annuities terminable in 1885, an operation which will add about £540,000 at once to the £710,000 now paid as interest upon the deposit, and a certain further increase every year till it reaches about £1 500,000. By this means, by increasing the present annual charge on the debt by a sum varying from half a million to a million and a half, and by a continual reinvestment of all the accumulation of interest not called for by the savings banks trustees, we shall in eighteen years have extinguished £40,000,000, of the debt. The plan met with the general approval of the House, and was agreed to without opposition.

FENIANISM.

Fenianism is still troublesome on both sides of the Atlantic. In Dublin we have to chronicle one brutal murder and two attempts at assassination, and several new arrests have been made of members of the "brotherhood." In America one of the factions has menaced the territory of New Brunswick. Large numbers of them, we are told, are clustering in the little villages along the coast and the frontier, under the command of Doran Killian, a leader of the party. The immediate object is presumed or pretended to be the seizure of Campo Bello, for the purpose of converting it into a Fenian depot or station. Meanwhile Stephens is seeking to strengthen his cause by an alliance with Garibaldi and the Spanish rebel, General Prim—neither of whom are likely to have anything to do with him.

THE JAMAICA ENQUIRY.

The great Jamaica inquiry has at last terminated, and Mr. Russell Gurney Q.C., and Mr. Maule have brought with them the report of the Jamaica Commission, which was unanimously agreed upon between themselves and Sir H. Storks, and will be laid before Parliament with all possible despatch. The Blue book will be one of the largest ever seen, being swelled out by a mass of official papers, as well as by the voluminous notes of evidence. It would be premature to speculate on the tenor of the report, but it is generally expected that Governor Eyre will be recalled. Much inconvenience is caused at Malta by the absence of Sir Henry Storks, and it is very desirable not only that he should be relieved from his duties in Jamaica, but that the present temporary and unsettled condition of the Government in that colony should cease.

THE UNITED STATES.

A diplomatic correspondence with France and Austria relative to Mexico has been laid before Congress, in which Mr. Seward states emphatically that the Republican Government of Mexico is the only one recognised by the United States. General Meade has been despatched to Eastport, Maine, with a small force of regulars, to watch the Fenians who had made that place their headquarters. The steamer England has arrived at New York, from Halifax, 130 deaths from cholera having taken place on board her before she left that port. The Virginia steamer is now in quarantine at New York, having had 38 deaths from cholera during her passage.

SHIPPING.

The following vessels are reported as having arrived at their ports of destination from China and Japan.

Gem of the Ocean, Copioluti, Star King, Tanjore, Formosa, E. T. L., Caroline Elizabeth, Whirlwind, Emma and Mathilde, St. Julien, Roderick Dhu, Nabob, Vinco, John, N. Cushing, Antelope J. Patten Albuera.

The following vessels are announced as having sailed for Hongkong:—

Dryden, Andromeda, Albatross, Richard III., Sterlingshire.

The arrival of Mr. Hart and the Chinese mission which he accompanied, at Marseilles, is announced by the present mail.

The Delhi made the passage from Bombay to Galle in a little over 90 hours, and from Galle to Penang in 4½ days. She carries 490 chests of Malwa Opium for China, and the last Bombay prices averaged Rs. 1,575 per chest.

The amount of bullion by the present steamer is, in silver,—to Hongkong £10,108; to Shanghai £13,075.

Extracts.

The Chinese Customs Duties.

(From the "Shanghai Recorder".)

The peculiar system of fiscal arrangements which is in force in China is such as is likely constantly to cause unnecessary trouble, and often serious injury to foreign trade. While the duties stipulated for in the Treaty can properly only be considered as payable to the Imperial Government, the mode of collecting imposts is such as makes it a matter of jealousy and rivalry between the local officials as to the place at which certain amounts should be received. The apparently capricious and undoubtedly vexatious alterations in the Custom House regulations, which took place shortly after the Treaty had been ratified, were owing chiefly to this cause. At one time the public was informed that it was necessary to obtain exemption certificates on cargo shipped from Shanghai to Ningpo; and when they began to get used to this system they were suddenly told that it would be abandoned and that they would have to ship their cargo, obtain the drawback here and then repay the duty at Ningpo; and many other similar changes and rechanges took place, causing great annoyance and often positive loss, to the foreign merchant. The key to these apparently unnecessary variations is to be found in the system prevalent with respect to the levy of imposts in China. The local officials are bound to provide for a certain amount of expenditure out of the local taxes, and they have consequently the greatest interest in causing as much of the revenue as possible to pass through their hands. This system though always likely to cause some inconvenience to foreigners, is not, when applied between different ports, necessarily unjust to them; as though perhaps not in an easy or satisfactory manner, they do not at the same time have to pay more duty than the Treaty stipulates for. The extension, however, of this principle to cargo to be brought down from the country, was so clearly recognised as undesirable, that the system of transit passes was adopted to obviate the constant inconvenience and annoyance which a foreigner might experience in having to pay and repay imposts at the different barriers through which his cargo has to pass on its journey. It was consequently stipulated in the Treaty that the Transit duties should be commuted so far as foreigners' cargo is concerned, to one half of the Customs' Tariff, and that this amount should by those who had provided themselves with proper transit passes, be payable at the last barrier before reaching Shanghai or the Treaty port at which the cargo was to be shipped or sold. It has not, however, unfrequently happened that demands have been made even upon those who held transit passes; and that amounts have in this manner been paid, and have been the subjects of subsequent reclamation, through the Consular authorities. In such a case it is obvious that the person whose goods are taxed, has palpable grounds for recovering the amount exacted in excess of the Treaty stipulations; but the question is by no means so clear against whom his claim should be instituted. Has he a right to refuse to pay the amount exacted in transitu to the Customs here; or is his only remedy to appeal to his Consul and so cause the matter to become a diplomatic question? This point we understand has recently arisen in the case of a British subject whose teas in coming down from the country were overtaxed in the manner just indicated: in consequence of which he refused to pay the full transit dues to the Custom House, but demanded that the sum he had disbursed up the country should be deducted from it. A correspondence, we understand, ensued upon the subject, eventuating in the Custom House giving up the tea in dispute; though we believe the point as to whether they should in all cases be called upon to adopt this course is held open for reference to Pekin.

There cannot, we imagine, be much difficulty in deciding the question, as it is clear that the bond to pay the Customs here the commuted Transit duty is given only upon the understanding that no further inland duties shall be exacted, and if that condition be broken, the contract thereby must be held as void, and the customs can no longer with any show of justice, claim the amount. We cannot in any way recognise the Chinese Government as being able to discard its responsibility in respect to the actions of its subordinate officials. However much the Chinese system of Government may make the provincial governors irresponsible to the central authority, it is impossible for us to consider any such plea as valid without going counter to the clear spirit and force of our treaties, and also acting contrary to the recognised policy of centralizing our relations. The time has come when the necessity of providing suitable means of settling disputes of this nature upon a legal instead of a diplomatic basis has become so obviously necessary that it would be as unwise in practice as it is uncalled for either by treaty or policy, to give the Chinese Customs, as conducted under the system of the Foreign Inspectorate, immunity from the responsibility which should attach to it, of being the means of enabling the foreigner to escape unjust taxation, as well as that of placing the Chinese in a position to levy their just imposts. Unless the foreign Inspectorate be the medium of fulfilling both these conditions, it must fall far short of what may be fairly looked for, and of what was expected from it at the time the Treaty was ratified.

THE AUSTRIAN AND PRUSSIAN ARMIES.—The following is a comparative statement of the Austrian and Prussian armies when raised to their full war strength: The Austrian army upon a full war footing (excluding the men not required for absolute service in the field, who number 34,000) amounts to 670,000 men, consisting of 431,000 infantry, 57,000 artillery, 106,000 extra corps, drivers, sanitary aids, ambulance and field-hospital men, &c., and 42,000 cavalry. Deducting from the infantry and the jägers, the fourth battalions and depôt strength (109,800 men), who remain the country and the recruiting districts, the number of the available foot soldiers amounts to 311,000. Making a similar deduction from the artillery, the extra corps, and the cavalry, the two former could take the field with 77,000 and the latter 35,700 men, amounting altogether to 433,700. The Prussian army, upon a war footing, includes all descriptions of infantry, with the reserve regiment of Guards, eight reserve regiments, 36 substitute battalions and companies (178,600 men); first class of Landwehr (116,000 men), second class of Landwehr (93,800 men); artillery, extra corps and train, with reserve and Landwehr detachments (105,150 men); Guards and line cavalry, with 55 substitute squadrons (37,000 men); first class Landwehr (28,800 men), second class Landwehr (12,500); together 78,300 in all therefore a force of 566,150 men. Calculating that on account of the strength of Austria, Prussia would be compelled to incorporate at once the first class of the Landwehr (144,800 infantry and cavalry), originally intended for garrisons and as reserve, there would have to be deducted from the above Prussian total as follows: 83,010 men for infantry depôts, 10,000 for those of cavalry, and 101,300 for second class of Landwehr, together 193,310 men, who would have to be employed to garrison the principal towns, the thirty fortresses, including Stettin, Cologne and Deutz, Danzig, Magdeburg, Posen, Coblenz and Ehrenbreitstein, Königsberg, and would be stationed as depôts in the recruiting districts. The available Prussian army would therefore amount to 367,840 men.—Reuter's Express.
